NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS TO PROTECT YOUR FINANCIAL HEALTH

- I will READ the Declaration Page of my Insurance Policy to become knowledgeable about the coverages I do have.
- I will call the sales agent and ask about the costs of increasing my coverages and especially my PIP (for Maryland and DC) and Med-Pay coverages (for VA residents).
- I will not let a stranger who injures me decide how much insurance coverage will be applicable to my injury claim. I will accomplish this by ensuring that my UIM coverage is well above the minimum required by law.
- If injured in a fall in a store or parking lot, I will report the fall to management, take pictures of the area with my cell phone and request an ambulance.
- I will contact The Lapidus Law Firm as soon as possible after an injury caused by negligence.

Will the Insurance Law Work to Your Advantage When a Negligent Driver Damages Your Car?

ANSWER: Sometimes it will. Depending on the circumstances, knowledge of a few concepts will help you to protect your financial interest in your vehicle:

1. Regardless of fault, your insurance carrier will pay for your vehicle repair (or total your car if the repair costs exceed 75% of your vehicle's depreciated value) and collect your deductible from the carrier of the at-fault driver.
2. If you cannot afford to pay the deductible "up front", you can wait for the at-fault driver's insurance company to pay the entire amount of your car damage. This could be a very long wait if the at-fault driver denies negligence and there is no police report. If your car was damaged by a Metro Bus, a cab or a government vehicle, you will also wait a long time while the liability adjuster "investigates". There is no law, rule or court case which requires the at-fault driver's carrier to pay for your vehicle repair or to total your car within a specific time frame.
3. HOWEVER, if the at-fault driver ADMITS liability to his carrier or if the police report says the at-fault driver was cited, then that driver's insurance company is likely to pay your vehicle damage promptly.
